

Along the Way

Jesus taught that there was a priest and a Levite, both religious men, who were walking and saw a hurt man along the way. Neither stopped to help him but instead turned away.

There was another man, a Samaritan, who stopped, bandaged his wounds, and took him to an inn to stay.

The priest and Levite may have thought they had important things to do that day, but the most important was along the way.